TEACHING METHODOLOGY

LEARNING OBJECTIVES OF THE SUBJECT

From classical beauty, symmetry and perspective to the composition of the twentieth century modern, urban planning has been historically constructed imitating the art of his time. When art has ceased to be a representation of form and composition, urbanization still continues to be imitating shapes, composition. Think about leaving for a moment the idea of imitating forms, composing, and instead exploring non-formal ways possible. These informal urbanism possible paths are explored in this course through the ideas and projects of urban intervention working with ideas like decentralization, urban action, the daily practice as a tool for critical thinking, memory and process and self-transformation of the city with proposals for action. These avenues of exploration synthesized and emphasize specific projects aimed at the transformation and revitalization of urban spaces. Research on several case studies, discussion sessions on various seminars and workshops with invited experts allow implement theoretical reflection.
