TEACHING METHODOLOGY

It is a projectual subject, so basically practice will be developed through a theoretical content of 15 hours and practical work with teachers in the classroom 30 hours.
However, the work features that teachers raise (an urban development project) requires a single work which corresponds to 2.3 hours per teaching hour of the subject (105 hours).

LEARNING OBJECTIVES OF THE SUBJECT

The course will include an analysis of the urban form and the study of the project in the background of landscape students, in order to provide them with the knowledge of planning foundations of any intervention on the city and the region.
It consists of theoretical lessons and practical representation exercises of a reality that allow to implement the lessons arguments and, in parallel, to raise interpretation and projectual questions of urban and territorial matters.
The course takes Barcelona as a case study because of the importance and diversity of the urban projects that have been developed throughout the history and green spaces that have given rise to.
Examples of green parks and systems that make up the great cities of the world are referred into the lessons.
Throughout the course there will be visits to some of the Reference parks where can be seen the relationship between green and the urban model where it fits.
